2020-2021

For this piece of artwork, I had a long process of things going on. The materials that I used to do this artwork is the sketchpad application, my phone to take pictures, and the materials inside the pictures. What inspired me to create this artwork is the images Ms.Howard presented to us. It was a really easy task, the only hard part was finding things in my house that looked like letters. Eventually, I kept looking and thinking outside of the box. I found all my letters. I learned that you should always try to think outside the box. Don't limit yourself to small wonders. From my work, I want people to know that it took a lot of time to do.

Some of my friends and my parents call me J.A.N it stands Jalen is Amazing and naive. So that is why there is 3 letters.

Like mostly school supplies, makeup, and home decor. Well the photo shown to me before the assignment was inspirational; A challenge was to have 8 letters in my name which made it hard for me to do this artwork. I learned you can make art out of anything! I want people to know this was an exciting and fun activity to do and would suggest it to others.

The materials I used for this project are pencils, measuring cup, a water hose, and wood. I also used something else but i don't know what it's called. The thing that inspired me was this image on google because I did not know what to do at first but when i looked similar it gave me a better understanding/ideas. The challenges that I faced to make this art was that I didn't find anything that looked similar to my name, the way I overcame this challenge was by going outside instead of looking around the house and when I found most of the things i needed I started to look around the house again. I want other people to know that finding this letter were not easy and that it takes time to do art like this. Gabriella O Team Ujima

SketchPad was not working for me. As an alternative, I used Google Drawings. It worked out great. Some materials that were used were my saxophone, my phone charger, my Xbox controller, my clock, and my Science textbook. This was not at all a challenge for me. Through this project, I learned that art comes in many shapes and sizes

Esther O. Team Ujima .

In this masterpiece, some materials that I used were the site called sketchpad.io and things around my house. Something that inspired me to create this piece of work was just the whole idea of photography art and using different and unique materials to create artwork. One challenge that I had to overcome when creating this was finding the materials that I liked and thought would be the best. Something that I learned from creating this was how easy it was to use sketchpad.io. Something that I want people to learn in this artwork is my name..

For this art project I used chopsticks, markers, and granola bars. The things that I use/ eat everyday inspired me because I use chopsticks and markers on a daily basis and I mostly eat granola bars for breakfast. I really had no challenges with this artwork but I wanted to become creative with my work like get something from outside but I wasn't able to go outside. I learned that you can use anything literally any item into art. It's really nothing that I want people to know about my work because it's pretty self explanatory.

Kai-Brielle Team Ujima

I used items I received from the school to create this artwork. What inspired me was that it could make it look like any item. At first I was confused because I really did not know what to do and I overcame it by actually out the pieces together. I learned that I could do anything with art. I want people to learn that they should actually try and not give up so fast.

I used my self, pencil, paper, and my computer to create this beautiful piece of work. I was inspired by myself to create this artwork. Creating this artwork was tricky because I don't do art on the regular basis. I learned I can always over power the negative. I am a hard worker.

The materials that I used were a sharp colored purple pencil since I didn't have black. I liked shading shapes. I always wanted to learn to shade it from a really like color to really dark. I did have a few challenges from doing this artwork. Those challenges were drawing a 3D cube and rectangle. Since I've been away from school I've really haven't touched a pencil or really drawn. Since I was a pro at drawing 3D cubes and rectangles I was surprised that I lost the ability to do so. Since I forgot I watched a tutorial on how to do it. By doing this project I learned that shading isn't that hard. Sometimes it may seem hard but all you need to do is practice. Because practice makes perfect. When people look at my artwork I want them to gain the confidence to do the same thing I did. For example the artwork that I have contains shading a shape. I want that person who is struggling to shade anything to look at my art work and say "I can do it".

Drawing does not come easy to me. But when I see something interesting I try to draw it. This artwork was made with just pencils. It took some practice and, as you can see, I tried my best on this. One challenge I had was making the shadows very real. The angle was also challenging. I overcame this challenge by re-watching the video Ms. Howard provided. Overall, it came out great.

I used my pencil and paper. I was inspired to learn how to do form drawings. It was kind of hard trying to do the shadows and it still is hard for me to do. I learned that you have a lot of patience because I had to do this over and over again. I want people to know that I tried very hard and I hope they like it .

For this project, the materials that I used were my drawing paper and a pencil. What inspired me to create this artwork was to master how to make shades from the light point and other parts of an object. A challenge that I had was finding where the light was going to hit the subject. Yet I overcame this issue by using the natural light from the window. What I learned from this was how to make a 2d picture look like a 3d because of the shading.

Paul K.

I used my sketchbook and pencil to create my drawing. What inspired me to make the drawing is that it takes up time. A challenge that I had was it didn't look like 3-D at first but I looked up a video on youtube. I learned that everything that looks easy isn't always easy. I want people to know that I can draw if you put your mind to it.

Jahnay S.

I used my sketchbook and a pencil for this artwork. My teacher inspired me to do this artwork by making it a grade. :) The challenge was getting the right angle to make every shape I did three dimensions. I learned that when I focused on the work I actually managed to get the work done with flying colors. I want people to know that I struggled with this work but I kept trying and figured out my mistakes with due time.

I used paper and pencils as my materials for this artwork. What inspired me to do this artwork was my art teacher. The challenge was having the motivation to draw out this piece of work, I overcame this by sucking it up and just started working on it. I learned that art pieces are really hard to do and can be very annoying but nice to look at. I want people to know that I had to do this artwork on my birthday and it was kinda sad.

Micrography Portrait Personality Traits

I was inspired by myself honestly. The challenge was trying to put all the words that I had written about my personality traits and I finished the work by copying and pasting it. I learned that words can actually surround your face. I want people to know that I worked my hardest to make this artwork

I used WordArt.com What inspired me to create this artwork was me , I pushed myself to complete the work specially knowing I don't know exactly what to do. What was challenging about this artwork was knowing i don't draw nor do art things but i overcame that by pushing myself $ doing what i'm supposed to do. I learned that everything isn't easy and everything isn't hard. Try your best no matter what happens or happens. I want people to know and look at this art work and be like I want or NEED this now, I want it to be beautiful and cost a lot.

Twitter Bird

I used the word art online software to create this artwork. I was inspired by my name art self portrait to do this and I used similar words for it. There were no challenges when creating this piece of art. I learned how to rearrange words in a cloud, use different fonts, and make shapes out of words. I think my work is amazing and the bird reminds me of the Twitter logo :)

LGBTQ+

I used the website WordArt.Com. I was inspired by the LGBTQ+ community. I saw someone on instagram posting flags that belong to different sexualities. And that really inspired me. What else inspired me was the lgbtphobia that's around the world. And I feel like others should be about to love who they want to love except for the older people loving very very young people because that's pedofillia. A Lot of people have hate towards trans people which is sad because they dont do anything wrong and other sexualites didnt do anything wrong. So I made this to appreciate the LGBTQ+ community. I really didn't have a challenge doing this project except the fact that when I was looking for other sexualities I stumbled across some that I've never heard before which caused me to go off track.. So that's how I learned about a lot of more sexualities while doing this project and it made me more curious about what else is out there that I don't know about. I want people to know that my work includes a lot of research and I hope that after they see my artwork that they have the urge to start educating themselves on more about the LGBTQ+ community like I did.

Guyana: We born and Grow

I used Paint, Paintbrush, Water, Fan and Pencil. My parents are from Guyana and I love the country so I decided to put a flag on my mask. My challenges was drawing the flag so I just drew triangles to get the flag.. I learned that the Guyanese flag has all these colors. I want people to know that the flag of Guyana, known as The Golden Arrowhead, has been the national flag of Guyana since May 1966 when the country became independent from the United Kingdom. It was designed by Whitney Smith, an American vexillologist.

Skeleton Mask

The materials that I use for my project with cardboard, newspaper sheds, black paint, white paint, grey paint, a flower, and plastic jewels. I was searching for something easy to do. I couldn't find any black flowers so I took a pink one and painted it black. I learned painting is fun. I want people to know how cute it is.

Ann-Christie D.

The World

The materials that I used were a mask, paint, and a pencil to plan out the whole thing. What inspired me to create this artwork was just scrolling through google images and I saw this black and white one so I just tried to put my one spin on it. What I learned from creating this artwork was that you have to be very accurate when painting or you will mess upon it. During this project, one challenge that I had to overcome was that my sister stepped on my mask. I overcame this by getting a new one and starting over. Something that I want people about my work is that it was very fun making it.

Paul K. Team Ujima

Flag and Culture Fusion

I used feathers and paint to create my mask. I was inspired by my culture and where I came from-St. Lucia. My challenge was getting the right color blue and I overcame it by mixing the blue with white to make it lighter. I learned that I can do anything that I put my mind to. I want people to know I worked my hardest on this project.

Armani M. Team Ujima

For the Culture

In this artwork, I used my favorite color, blue, as the base. On top, I put different colors that would match with it. Secondly, I learned that it takes patience to do this type of artwork. You need to paint some time dry to continue. Additionally, a challenge I had was figuring out how to design the mask. It did not turn out bad, after all. I am proud of my work.

Esther O. Team Ujima

Mask of Colors

The materials I used were paints and paint brushes. My first mask ripped and I had to make my own. That was a challenge. I learned that you could make a mask from anything, I want people to know that colors can fix anything.

The Purple Chicken.

I called it that because it looks like a Chicken Mask, except it has a purple bottom to it. We were told to make masks, however, I didn't receive one from Ms.Howard, nor a paintbrush! This was especially a challenge for me because I had to think outside of the box. Using a water bottle, acrylic paint, pipe cleaners, cotton balls, and my finger to paint, I made a kind of abstract mask. Creating this artwork made me realize that things won't always go your way. Sometimes you have to live life to the fullest and take risks. Though I had a lot of challenges, I still persevere and made one of the most precious pieces of art. I will always have this piece with me to remember all the funny times I had.

Alyssa W. Team Ujima

The materials that I used were a lot of paint brushes, thin sharpie, tape and acrylic paint. I really didn't have any inspiration at first. I was supposed to do ombre colors like pink blue purple but it didn't work out. So I said "why not do blue into black" I did that. One night I was on youtube and I was watching BTS' music video N.O. And the people who were controlling BTS had like a white face with a red or white stripe on their eyes and I wanted to try it and I did. It wasn't straight like I wanted it so I tried to fix it a little which worked a little bit. Another challenge that I had was drawing the lightning in the eye because I wanted it to look well but I really didn't have that good of paint brushed so I just tried my best. I learned that I just need to do my best and try to be very creative even though I don't like it others probably will like it. Art work really does not need to be perfect all time. I want people to know that I worked very hard on this project and I hope they really like it.

A Rainbow Adventure

I used paint and the mask I was given to create this mask. I was inspired by the rainbow that comes after the rain. A challenge I had was going the polka dots with paint because it took a lot of time and precision. I learned how to paint and create different colors with paint while making this.

Kalea E.

Team Ujima

I used a mask form, paint, and rice grains to create this mask. One thing that inspired me was the The United States Of America flag. One of challenges was not having the right things that I needed to create the mass such as a paintbrush.. It still was a challenge but it's not really what I wanted. I learned That you have take you time and have patience. I want people to know that I tried my best and It was not the full outcome that I wanted.

Jair B. Team Ujima

Blue Horned Demon

I used paint and beads on my mask. The purple devil emoji was my inspiration to make this but I used different colors. I had trouble drawing with a straight line with paint. I learned that artwork is never complete.

The Penguin Behind The Mask

I used my sketchbook, a normal pencil, and some colored pencils. When I accidentally threw away my original mask it inspired me to just draw my mask out instead. My challenge was not giving up on the mask but I managed to remember that when I do this I could get a good grade. I learned that envisioning things is a lot easier than drawing it on paper. I want people to know that it's easy not to like the work you do but all u have to know is that if it's good enough for a grade then you should love it.

The Tower of Cycle

It is a more simple piece of work, as I didn't have many materials to work with. One thing that inspired me to create this artwork was actually another student's work on this. I saw a video of somebody staking their items and it looked really cool. Like I said, I didn't have many materials to work with so I did my best to put something together. I learned that anything can be art, no matter the simplicity and I want people to know that art can be anything.

Abstract-ing

For this project, we did a type of artwork that consisted of recycled materials used to make a 3D Sculpture. Some of the materials were pipe cleaner, wires, bottle caps, beads, and the cardboard box that it is standing on. It wasn't really a hard thing to complete. It felt like something that was completely spontaneous, and came with no real challenges. This piece was definitely one of the easier ones I have created and has made me realize to not worry so much about what you do with art. The creativity and the craziness is all apart of the process. There are no rules to it, just do what you think is best. My artwork reflects my personality, and I want others to see that with this piece.

Holding Up The World

I used some recycled materials such as these juice boxes and I used some wood and some really good books. What inspired me to do this was my teacher Ms. Howard said I did a really good job on another assignment and told me I could do this one too if I'd liked. The challenge was making sure that the one piece of wood was a good enough foundation. Luckily it was so I didn't have too much issue with it staying up right or breaking under the weight. I learned that doing these little artworks where I create new things out of already built things are really fun. I want people to know that all you have to do is recycle some of the things we use and earth would be a lot more healthy because of that. :)

Title: Olaf and His Buddy

Artist Statement: In this piece of art, I used some wire, buttons, beads, pipe cleaners, and a rectangular thing I found with holes in it. I was inspired to create this by my frozen sleeping bag. It had Anna and Elsa but I decided to make Olaf with a twist; He now has a buddy. This artwork taught me that literally ANYTHING can be turned into art, you'd be surprised. I want people to know that you can make art + your favorite characters out of literally anything. It also allowed me to bring out a creative side of me

The Recycled Sculpture

The materials that I used were cereal boxes, plastic, basically junk and items that people will throw away once they're done using it. Also a hot glue gun. Nothing really inspired me to do this art project. I just went with the flow and made it look good. During this project some people might have faced challenges but I didn't. I've been building towers all my life with legos, cups and random items in my house so doing these projects wasn't that challenging. I learned that people really waste a lot of items in their house. Some items can be turned into artwork like mine or you can just recycle it instead of throwing it away for more trash to build up upon itself. From others looking at my artwork i want them to know that trash can be turned into pieces of art.

What I used for this project was a shoe box and bottle caps. What inspired me to create this was the game Among Us. I have not faced any challenges except for the Bubble letter for G. Paper Bouquet

The materials I used are paper and a crystal or diamond earring. What inspired me to create the bouquet was the fact that I didn't have anything else to braid it with but paper and I decided that when I was making a fan I just tied the fan together and turned it into a bouquet. One challenge was discovering how I was going to put it together but I overcame it by just tying it up with the diamond earring and I think it makes him look more like a bouquet now. I've learned that you can make anything out of ours even if it's just measly little paper fans like this. What I want people to know if I might work is that I spent a long time on it and that I think it's really good.

The Work Of A LifeTime

I was inspired to create this because it was in my drawing book. I just used paper, pencil and glue and other things to decorate it to make it look nice. There was no challenge that I had to overcome in the process of making this. I learned that drawing really isn't that hard when you have a set goal and plan on what you want to draw. I want people to know that I made this because I enjoy playing video games.

Sun meets the Sea

The materials that I used were oil pastels, my fingers and a piece of paper. I didn't get inspiration from anything or anyone. It just came to my mind that I should do it. Doing this project was very fun to do so I didn't have any complications or challenges while doing this. I learned that I can be very creative at the right times because if it's at the wrong time then the artwork wouldn't turn out as well as I want it to. But when I did this artwork it was at the right time so it turned out very pretty and very nice like the way I wanted it to. I want people to know that I am very proud of what I did and what I made on this piece of paper.

Infinity

The materials that I used were white paint, purple paint, a canvas, paint brushes, a stencil and a paper plate. This artwork I kind of made for my dad. I was going to give it to him for his birthday when he drops off my presents and since I never really gave him anything for his birthday I wanted to start this year to show my appreciation and love to him. I didn't have any inspiration but since this was for my dad I somehow came up with the infinity sign. Which means many things in my art work like "he will forever be my dad" or "I will always love him" stuff like that. I had many challenges while doing this project. Once is the stencil. The stencil that I used wasn't like holding down to the canvas and it was like air holes in them and the paint went through it. Two I was trying to do like an ombre purple type of thing to match and it turned out really well but I got black paint on the white part so I painted over it now so it really doesn't look ombre. I learned that sometimes art can be frustrating and hard but you just need to sometimes take breaks in between doing it because art work takes time especially if you want the outcome to be perfect. I want people to know that they have to believe in themselves and try. Not everything can turn out the way you want it to be, others might like the outcome and they might find it interesting.

The Stack of Knowledge and Fun

I used some of my new books that I got for my birthday, my sketchbook, and some wine glasses. What inspired me was the fact that Ms. Howard recommended a unique book stack from a website she showed me, and that gave me an idea. The challenge was the fact of making my books balance without them falling off the glasses. I learned that my books have a really nice color scheme for taking pictures with. I want people to know that Ms. Howard is a really nice teacher. :)

Black Excellence

For this piece of artwork I call it "Black Excellence." I wanted to make it for a tribute to the beautiful black women in our world, and show their true powers. I used one of the fine pieces of paper Ms. Howard gave me, some markers, oil-pastels, and acrylic paints to make this artwork. I still didn't have a paintbrush at this time so I used my finger to paint. It got a little messy at some points, however, I cleaned up and kept on trying. I learned that it doesn't matter the circumstances, you can always create art. I want people to know that all women are beautiful no matter their skin tone.
